Hi Dorcas,

I have to say it still sounds like a A1 shop in planning terms given that there is to be no primary cooking on site (although I have limited info to go on). Also if there is no eating/drinking on site, nor heating up of food, then this would also point to an A1 use.

The reason for the initial objection was a concern that the premises was turning into a bar or similar, given the proposed opening hours and lack of info.

If the use is to be an A1 shop, then we have no objection, given that the lawful/established use of the site is as an A1 shop, if there is a change to an A3 (Café/restaurant) or A5 (takeaway) then at the proposed (revised) hours I don't think we would raise an objection however planning permission may be required.

Thanks
